

The implementation of artificial intelligence in modern software requires a robust understanding of neural networks. While traditional algorithms follow fixed rules, machine learning models learn patterns from large datasets to make predictions. This transition from logic-based programming to data-driven inference is a fundamental shift in computer science. However, ensuring data privacy remains a significant challenge for developers today.